

The Brandon Family Legacy

Raymond B. Brandon Sr.

A Family History

Compiled by Brian Keith Anderson

THE Brandon Family Legacy

Preserving the Stories, Lives, and Lineage

of the Brandon Family

by

B.K. Anderson

Bruce Brandon – A Personal Profile

Bruce DeWayne Brandon

This book opens with Bruce Brandon because his life and presence are woven through both my own story and the wider Brandon family story I am preserving here. I worked alongside Bruce for more than forty years, sharing seasons of work, change, and quiet endurance. Over that time, I came to know him not just as a colleague, but as someone whose steadiness, memory, and character helped many of us anchors.

Bruce carried with him a deep sense of responsibility to family and community. He did not seek spotlight, yet his influence was felt in the way he showed up — consistently, calmly, and with care for those around him. In conversations, in work, and in ordinary moments of life, he reflected the kind of grounded strength that holds families together across generations.

The photographs he has shared for this book are more than images; they are doorways into memory — reminders of who came before, what was built, and what endures. Through them, and through his own recollections, Bruce helps keep the Brandon lineage alive not as dates on a page, but as living history.

This profile honors him as a witness to much of that history and as a bridge between the past and the present.

I worked with Bruce until my retirement. We shared many good years together, and those years left a deep mark on my life. Bruce was more than a co-worker — he is a loyal friend, a friend for life.

In many ways, Bruce is the reason I began my ancestral work. While researching my own family cemeteries and tracing my lines, I was also working on my Anderson Legacy books. During that time, I decided to do Bruce's line as well and place a copy of his family history in the library. That decision grew into this book.

Our working life together spanned decades. We first worked side-by-side at Gold Kist, Inc. in Manchester Grain Elevator. When Gold Kist left Kokomo Grain, we moved with the work to Kokomo, which had a contract with Jack Daniel Distillery and handled grain for their whiskey. At the same time, Kokomo also handled George Dickel's grain.

We worked together for more than thirty years. When Kokomo left, we both went to Woodall Grain Company, which had purchased Kokomo's elevators. I continued to work with Bruce there until I retired in 2024.

Our days were long — harvest seasons were exhausting — but there was purpose in the work. Farmers depended on us, and we depended on each other. Bruce eventually became the manager at Woodall Grain, now one of the largest grain elevators in the mid-South.

I first met Bruce when he was around sixteen. His father, Buck, worked with me at Manchester Grain Elevator. Bruce would come after school to help. Even then, he was hardworking and steady.

Bruce's father, Buck Brandon, also operated his own business selling produce at the Nashville Farmers Market. He sold watermelons and cantaloupes, and they were loaded by hand, Bruce went with his father to Florida, and his father brought produce, and hand loaded them one at a time. Bringing them back to sell. Buck's father Buckshot — who is also mentioned in this book — ran a spot inside the market, and that was what he was doing when I first met him.

When Bruce graduated high school, he came to work full-time with us at Gold Kist. From there, his career in grain grew into a lifetime of leadership, responsibility, and respect in the agricultural community.

Because of this long friendship — and because of the years we spent side by side — this book came to be.

— B.K. Anderson

Back Left to right: Buck, John, Siba,
Buckshot, Jimmy Harmon

Front Left to right: Gerdine Adcock, Eunice
Harmon, Joyce Trail

Gravestone of Buckshot and Siba

Buckshot, John, Buck Brandon

Bruce Brandon owes this truck it was Buckshot. He is restoring it at this time. When Buckshot purchased this truck, he had Bruce with him and let him drive it home from dealer, he was 16 at the time.

Siba McCullough and Raymond B Brandon

Raymond B. Brandon, Sr., was born on January 19, 1919, in Cannon County, Tennessee, during a time when rural communities were closely knit and family ties ran deep. Growing up in Middle Tennessee, Raymond witnessed a period of momentous change in the nation and carried the steady values of his upbringing throughout his life.

He remained connected to the region that shaped him, and his life reflected the rhythms of Tennessee family lifework, responsibility, and devotion to home. Raymond passed away on September 11, 1983, in Manchester, Coffee County, Tennessee, where he was laid to rest among the people and places familiar to him.

His life stands as part of the enduring foundation of the Brandon family legacy, remembered through the generations that followed.

Siba M. McCullough Brandon was born on January 7, 1920, in Coffee County, Tennessee. Raised in Middle Tennessee, she came of age in a period defined by resilience, family devotion, and strong community bonds—values she carried throughout her life.

Siba spent much of her life rooted in Coffee County, where home, family, and continuity were central. She lived a long life marked by dedication to those she loved and passed away on August 31, 2013, in Manchester, Coffee County, Tennessee.

Through her life and legacy, Siba M. McCullough Brandon remains an enduring part of the Brandon family story, remembered with respect and gratitude by the generations who followed.

Children:

Eunice Brandon was born about 1937 in Coffee County, Tennessee.

Growing up in Middle Tennessee, she became part of the next generation, carrying forward the Brandon family name and traditions rooted in the region.

As a living member of the family, Eunice represents the continuing legacy of Raymond B. Brandon, Sr., and Siba M. McCullough Brandon, connecting past generations with those yet to come.

Eunice Brandon

Spouse:

Clayton Harmon

Born 3 May 1931 in Coffee County, Tennessee, Clayton Harmon grew up during a period marked by the lingering effects of the Great Depression and the approach of World War II. Raised in a rural Tennessee community, he experienced firsthand the values of hard work, family responsibility, and perseverance that defined life in Coffee County during the mid-20th century.

Clayton spent most of his life rooted in Coffee County, maintaining close ties to the Manchester area and the surrounding countryside.

Like many men of his generation, his life reflected steady commitment—to family, community, and the rhythms of everyday work that sustained local life.

He married Eunice Brandon, uniting two long-standing Coffee County families. Their marriage strengthened family bonds within the Brandon lineage and carried forward traditions of kinship and mutual support. Together, they shared a life grounded in place, family connection, and community continuity.

Clayton Harmon passed away on 19 March 2016 in Manchester, Coffee County, Tennessee, leaving behind a legacy remembered by family and those who knew him. His life stands as part of the enduring story of the Brandon family's presence in Coffee County—one generation among many who shaped its history through quiet dedication and lasting ties

Raymond Brandon Jr.

Raymond Brandon Jr. was born on October 21, 1939, in Bedford County, Tennessee. As part of the next generation of the Brandon family, he grew up during a period of recovery of post-Depression and wartime change, shaped by the values and traditions passed down from his parents.

Raymond spent his life in Tennessee, maintaining strong ties to the region that had long been home to his family. He passed away on July 19, 2016, in Murfreesboro, Rutherford County, Tennessee, leaving behind a legacy rooted in family continuity and remembrance.

Spouse:

Francis Ruth Winton

Born 20 April 1936 in Coffee County, Tennessee, Francis Ruth Winton came of age during a time of profound change in rural Tennessee, shaped by post-Depression resilience and the close-knit values of community and family life. Raised in Coffee County, she was part of a generation that bridged traditional ways of living with a rapidly modernizing world.

She married Raymond B. Brandon, becoming his lifelong partner and an integral part of the Brandon family legacy. As wife and mother, Francis Ruth helped anchor the family through daily life, nurturing relationships, traditions, and the continuity of home. Her role within the family reflected quiet strength, devotion, and steadfast presence—qualities often carried forward by those who knew her best.

Francis Ruth spent her life deeply connected to Manchester and Coffee County, where family, faith, and community shaped everyday experience. Her influence lived not only in her household but also in the enduring bonds she helped sustain among extended family members.

She passed away on 15 July 1991 in Manchester, Coffee County, Tennessee, leaving a legacy remembered through the family she helped build and the generations that followed. Her life remains an essential chapter in the story of the Brandon family in Coffee County.

Children:

Bruce Dewayne Brandon: Born in 1962

Cindy Lynn Brandon: Born in 1964

John Henry Brandon

John Henry Brandon was born on July 20, 1941, in Bedford County, Tennessee. Growing up in a family deeply rooted in Middle Tennessee, he was part of a generation shaped by the years surrounding World War II and the enduring strength of close-knit communities.

John Henry spent much of his life connected to Bedford County, the place of both his birth and passing. He died on March 13, 2009, in Bedford County, Tennessee, leaving a lasting place in the Brandon family lineage and in the memories of those who knew him.

Spouse:

Sarah Helena Lowe

Born 31 July 1941 in Bedford County, Tennessee, Sarah Helena

Lowe grew up in Middle Tennessee during a period shaped by wartime uncertainty and post-war renewal. Raised in a region rich with agricultural traditions and close-knit communities, she carried forward values of family devotion, resilience, and care for others throughout her life.

She married John Henry Brandon, joining the Lowe and Brandon families and becoming an important part of the Brandon family lineage. As wife and mother, Sarah Helena played a significant role in maintaining family bonds, offering steady support, and nurturing the home life that sustained those around her. Her presence reflected strength, warmth, and commitment across the years of their shared life.

Sarah Helena spent much of her life in Tennessee, later residing in the Murfreesboro area. Her life bridged counties and generations yet remained grounded in the traditions and relationships that defined Middle Tennessee family life.

She passed away on 27 January 2020 in Murfreesboro, Rutherford County, Tennessee, leaving behind a legacy of love, dedication, and family continuity. Her memory endures through the lives she touched, and the generations connected to her care.

Gerdine Brandon

Gerdine Brandon was born about 1944 in Tennessee, growing up as part of a gen